Condition Report

The case has been left completely unpolished, showing honest signs of age while retaining excellent shape and originality. The silver/white dial displays a beautifully even natural patina, giving the watch a warm and attractive vintage appearance. Hands and hour pips have aged consistently to a creamy tone, adding to the overall harmony of the dial. The acrylic crystal shows only light marks commensurate with age and remains clean and presentable. Overall, this is a very well-preserved 1950s Tudor Prince, further elevated by the inclusion of its rare original box.

Working Order

The manual wind movement was fully serviced in our workshop on 1 March 2026. It is running very well and is covered by our 12-month mechanical guarantee. As expected with a vintage watch of this era, it should not be considered waterproof.

Our View

Dennison cased Tudors from the 1950s are increasingly appreciated for their charm, historical significance and unique UK manufacturing link. This Tudor Prince 12856 stands out thanks to its untouched case, warm natural patina and the rare presence of its original box. It is an excellent option for collectors seeking originality, authenticity and character in a vintage Tudor.
