Our View

The Deepsea is one of Rolex's greatest engineering achievements. Built for professional saturation diving and capable of withstanding depths of 3,900 metres, it combines extreme capability with everyday wearability in a way few watches can.

This example has everything collectors look for — full set completeness, original unpolished condition, recent service history and exceptional overall presentation. The 44mm case gives it tremendous wrist presence, while the Calibre 3235 provides Rolex's latest generation reliability and performance.

When originally sold, this watch retailed at £11,200, while the current Deepsea now sits close to £13,000 RRP. To acquire a complete 2022 example in this condition for under £9,000 represents outstanding value.
