A Significant Chapter in Tudor History

The Tudor Oyster Prince Ref. 7809 occupies a notable place in early Tudor and Rolex history. Historical records indicate that a small number of Tudor Oyster Prince watches were supplied to members of the British North Greenland Expedition during the early 1950s as part of Rolex's ongoing programme of testing Oyster watches in demanding real-world environments.

Whether acquired as an important addition to a Tudor or Rolex collection, a historically significant vintage watch, or a characterful daily wearer, the Ref. 7809 offers a compelling combination of originality, heritage, and collectability.
