Omega Genève 162.0042 Automatic Gold-Plated 1972

Omega Genève 162.0042 – A beautiful and increasingly desirable vintage Omega, dating to 1972 and showcasing the distinctive square-case styling that defined much of the brand's design language during the era. With its elegant silver dial, gold-plated case and automatic movement, this Genève delivers all the charm of a classic 1970s Omega while remaining highly wearable today.

Presented in very good overall condition and fitted with a new high-quality leather strap, this example stands out thanks to its exceptionally well-preserved dial and refined proportions. A wonderfully understated dress watch that represents excellent value within the vintage Omega market.

Our View

The Genève range contains some of Omega's most interesting vintage references, and the 162.0042 is a particularly attractive example thanks to its distinctive square case and elegant simplicity. While many collectors focus on the better-known Seamaster and Constellation ranges, watches like this demonstrate just how much value can still be found within the Genève collection.

The combination of the gold-plated case, silver dial and slim profile creates a sophisticated vintage aesthetic that works just as well today as it did in the early 1970s. The near-perfect dial is especially noteworthy and significantly enhances the watch's appeal.

A classy, understated and increasingly collectible vintage Omega that would make an excellent addition to any collection.
