

Victorian Ruby & Diamond Marquise Ring | 18ct Gold | c.1900 POA

A beautifully made ruby and diamond marquise ring, crafted in 18ct gold and dating to around 1900.

At its centre is a vivid, natural ruby of approximately 0.30 carats, framed by a glimmering halo of old-cut diamonds totaling around 0.20 carats.

The stones are set in a marquise-shaped face that sits low and comfortably on the hand, giving a striking horizontal profile that feels both classic and quietly distinctive.

Interestingly, the marquise cut - a narrow oval with pointed ends, also known as a navette (French for "little boat") - was allegedly commissioned by Louis XV to resemble the lips of his mistress, the Marquise de Pompadour.

The tapered shoulders lead into a simple gold shank, allowing the gemstone setting to take centre stage.

British-made and hallmarked, this is a ring full of period charm - elegant, refined, and easy to wear every day.

A timeless antique piece with just the right amount of drama.
