

Silver Necklace with Moonstone & Fire Opal | Austro-Hungarian Influence | English c.1960s POA

A beautifully made silver necklace dating to the 1960s, set with a luminous moonstone cabochon and four vivid fire opals.

The pendant, measuring 6cm in length, is crafted in an ornate, symmetrical design with delicate openwork and granulation - drawing clear inspiration from Austro-Hungarian jewellery, though made later, most likely in England.

The pairing of moonstone and fire opal creates a striking contrast: soft, cool iridescence against rich, fiery orange.

Suspended from a 48cm silver chain, the necklace sits just below the collarbone, a flattering length that works well with both classic and relaxed styling.

It's a bold but wearable piece, likely made for someone with an eye for artistic detail and a taste for historic revival styles.

In excellent vintage condition.
